GICHD STRATEGY 2015-2018 – AN OVERVIEW

Convention obligations are fulfilled and/or completion targets reached	Residual contamination is effectively managed through sustainable national processes	Mine action is fully integrated into broader efforts to achieve human security
Overarching and specific risks and assumptions from outcomes 1.1, 1.2, 1.3 to strategic objective 1 (see Results framework)	Overarching and specific risks and assumptions from outcomes 2.1, 2.2, 2.3 to strategic objective 2 (see Results framework)	Overarching and specific risks and assumptions from outcomes 3.1, 3.2, 3.3 to strategic objective 3 (see Results framework)
 National mine action strategies that are focused on measurable and sustainable results and that mainstream gender and diversity are developed, improved, implemented and monitored Greater clarity is achieved on the extent and impact of explosive hazards and their operational implications through improved information management Improved standards, methods and tools in mine action are applied, in particular in operational planning and land release 	 Mine action structures successfully transition to sustainable national entities with capacity to address residual contamination Countries evaluate the overall risk from residual contamination based on evidence National policies, procedures and practices are in place to respond adequately to the risks from residual contamination 	 Mine action is perceived, planned and implemented such that it contributes to human security Mine action standards, methods and tools are used to benefit human security Cooperation between mine action and other human security actors is strengthened through platforms such as the Maison de la Paix
